Alabama				10/6/2025	Alabama does not have state licensure for polysomnography currently. Graduates are eligible to sit for the RPSGT credentialing exam upon graduation. See current requirements at the BRPT website https://www.brpt.org/ About the RPSGT Credential The Registered Polysomnographic Technologist (RPSGT) is a mid-level, internationally recognized credential representing the highest certification in the field for the health care professionals who clinically assess patients with sleep disorders. The BRPT sets the credentialing standards for the RPSGT credential and develops, maintains and administers the RPSGT exam. The RPSGT credential ensures that sleep technologists hold the highest level of core knowledge, skills, abilities and attributes. The RPSGT credential is preferred by employers. Statutory requirements for sleep technologists can vary greatly from state to state. Some states require licensure for sleep technologists, while other states don't address education or training for sleep technologists at all in their statutes. The AAST offers a comprehensive directory that outlines the statutory requirements in each state for sleep technologists. Stay up to date on the necessary requirements in your state to obtain and/or maintain licensure here https://aastweb.org/Clinical-Resources/State-Support-Directory/
